Summary: Winning or losing evidentiary motions can make or break a patent case. But deciding which motions to make, gauging likelihood of success, and assessing their impact on trial strategy can be challenging given the evolving case law under Rule 702 and the different tendencies and local rules of district courts around the country. Please join our panel of patent litigators as they discuss the legal and strategic considerations at play in shaping your case for trial through Daubert motions, motions to strike, and motions in limine.
